Amelia Glover, the clever American dancer, reappeared.

Justice Haggerty also issued a warrant "The City Directory" will not be seen for the arrest of Tanner's wife, Annie, on a charge of complicity in the matter. The warrant was placed in the hands of Police Capt. Campbell, of the Humboldt street station, and he will make the arome time to-day if the woman has not flown with her busband.

Tanner's escape was effected by novel scheme. He was arrested on Oct. Bros. brewery. He was held by Justice on to await the action of the Grand ry, and was sent to Raymond Street

Jail.

It was visitors' day at the jail yesterday.
During the afternoon fully 200 persons called to see friends who were behind the bars. Shortly before 3 o'clock a pretty little woman, clad in black, presented herself before Clerk Smith and asked for a card to visit her busband, John Tanner. She was accompanied by a tall, good-locking man, who proved to be Genden. They passed into the jail, and the keepers paid no more attention to them than to stores of other visitors.

A half hour afterwards Mrs. Tanner emerged from the jail. She was accompanied by a man, who handed a visitor's card to Clerk Smith, and the pair, after thanking the clerk for his courtesy, left the grim old building.

A few minutes after 4 o'clock a man stepped up before Smith's desk and told him that he had lost his card of admission.

"If you haven't get your ticket you'll ave to stay here over night," said the erk. The visitor searched his clothing gain, examined the band in his hat and naily declared that he had lost his cloth.

finally declared that he had lost his liticket.

One of the keepers who chanced to overhear the conversation recognized the man as Mis. Tanner's companion. Tanner's cell was visited and his absence was discovered. Genden had given his card to Tanner, and the latter had walked out of the jail without being questioned.

Genden saw, that he was caught and he admitted the facts. "Tanner has got an hour the better of the start, and you can't catch him now," said Genden.

Genden gave his age as forty-three years, and he said that Mrs. Tanner lived in ahis house. He was locked up in the De Kalb avenue station.

Sup. Campbell has detailed several detectives to search for Tanner, and the police in all sections of the city have been asked to watch for him. Tanner is twenty-six years old, live feet seven inches in height, medium build, and has a sandy, mustache.

The officials at the jai' say that there were more visitors yeaterday than usual, and that it was impossible to keep track of a levery person who entered.
